These duties, averaging $2.55 per cent during the period that the Dingley tariff laws have been in force, are much higher than is necessary to cover the difference between the cost of labor in this and foreign countries, and increased duties would simply result in higher prices to the consumers and large additional profits to the domestic manufacturers.

We would submit that there is absolutely no reason why the consumers of the country should be required to pay higher prices for these necessary articles of general consumption, and would urge that if any change is made in the present tariff rates it should be in the nature of lower duties instead of higher rates. We therefore respectfully ask that the House members of the Conference Committee on the tariff bill be instructed by you to accept the rates of duty adopted by the Senate.
